Corbin Sharun

Corbin Sharun first started playing football at age seven with the Leduc Atom Bobcats. He played all his years of minor football with Leduc, winning numerous awards with the Ti-Cats. He then attended Edmonton's Strathcona Composite High School, where he was a three-year starter for the Lords.

Corbin was a powerful player who stood out from the crowd, garnering recognition wherever he played. At Strathcona he was named rookie of the year, had the most thrown touchdowns in the league in each of his first two years, and won three straight city championships with the Lords.

After receiving a scholarship from St. Francis Xavier University, he played for two years in Nova Scotia before returning home due to a family member's illness. He played his next two years as a safety with the Edmonton Wildcats of the CJFL, and was named an All Canadian defensive back.

Corbin was selected 43rd overall by the Edmonton Eskimos in the sixth round of the 2010 CFL Draft, and quickly cemented his spot on the team roster. In the 2010 season he led the team with special teams tackles. In 2011, he tied an Eskimo single-season record with 25 special teams tackles, the second-highest total in the CFL at the time. In the 2012 season, he scored his first CFL touchdown after catching a pass during a botched field goal.

Corbin retired from the CFL in 2016, and having fulfilled his dream of playing football professionally, he fulfilled another life-long dream and joined the Edmonton Police Service. He loves the team atmosphere and the opportunity to give back to the community, and enjoys working out and mountain biking in his spare time.
